

ABSTRACT

Disclosed is a method in which a connection is routed from a first mobile station to a second mobile station via at least one additional mobile station, pieces of positional information being detected via the mobile stations. A central routing device determines a route for the connection based on the pieces of positional information. The routing device generates routing information corresponding to the determined route and transmits said routing information to the mobile stations.